At Prevent Breast Cancer
we believe that a woman's chance of survival should never be determined by socioeconomic status or ethnicity.

Why addressing health inequities matters:

- Breast cancer mortality rates are higher for women from socially deprived areas.
- Black and South Asian women are less likely to attend breast screening and more likely to be diagnosed with breast cancer at a later stage, leading to poorer survival rates compared with white women.

The Health Inclusion team work across Greater Manchester to raise awareness of the signs and symptoms of breast cancer, how to check your breasts and the importance of breast screening.

We centre the needs of ethnically diverse and under-served communities, creating an inclusive space where women feel heard and valued.

We provide free, tailored support for your community, including:

- Educational and interactive workshops
- Breast health awareness stalls at events
- Culturally tailored, multilingual resources
- Brining our Breast Awareness Café to your community

We can deliver in English, Urdu and Punjabi, and can work with interpreters for other languages.
